

Hungry Magic <alexanderjohnccasper@gmail.com>

graph for confidence post

1 message

Jose Quesada <me@josequesada.com>
To: alexanderjohnccasper@gmail.com

Thu, Nov 13, 2025 at 3:41 PM

claim: Confidence doesn't come from external success

My identity is built on the claim being true -> claim it makes me feel good that the claim is true -> claim

Author's personal experience -> people who try to become confident through fitness, clothing, social approval, get temporary improvements to their confidence but soon return to base level: evidence

people who try to become confident through fitness, clothing, social approval, get temporary improvements to their confidence but soon return to base level -> improving external aspects only gives short-term boost in confidence improving external aspects only gives short-term boost in confidence -> Because Confidence is not necessarily linked to external markers, improving external aspects only gives short-term boost in confidence

Author's personal experience -> Confidence is not necessarily linked to external markers: evidence

Confidence is not necessarily linked to external markers -> Because Confidence is not necessarily linked to external markers, improving external aspects only gives short-term boost in confidence

Because Confidence is not necessarily linked to external markers, improving external aspects only gives short-term boost in confidence -> claim

- Jose

--

Jose Quesada, PhD,
Director, Data Science Retreat
<http://datasciencetretreat.com>